Dear Sir,

I was interested to see in issue number 10 of OZ that you are having problems with the Commissioners of Customs and Excise.

You appear to be approaching this from a common sense point of view. This is the last approach to succeed with the purchase tax authorities.

They are however, sensible about being embarrassed or faced with the possibility of having to do some work. I have found that in negotiating with them it is useful to show examples of similar situations where tax is not being charged. If you can claim that you are being discriminated against unfairly, their grounds for argument seem to shift. If you tell them that you are willing to take the matter to court, they are more likely to back down.

I am sending to you with this letter, copy of a magazine published by Evans Erskine, the entire format of which makes it suitable only for display on the wall of a classroom. It cannot be argued by the Commissioners that the educational connection has any significance since they steadfastly maintained for years that educational apparatus is liable to tax as a toy.

I hope you win this fight. You probably realise that the civil servants attempting to overrule their rather porous authority are fellow men susceptible to definition by a sharp prick.

Yours sincerely,
T B van Housdenham

Dear Sir,

With much reluctance and fear-thought, I feel the need to write to you in connection with the London Diggers Love Canyons (OZ No 8).

It is an admirable idea that it would obviously become the retreat for sex-starved men, yellow bellied cowards, men who seek security from life, without all the responsibilities that it entails. They feel the need to be wanted by the opposite sex and to remain this need with a child but they will not accept the responsibilities resulting from these actions. In fact they can not face up to this 'modern world'.

Yours,
C F Eason-Hill

Dear Sir,

and N A Mason (Optimist) wrote before on many issues and is to be congratulated on telling his head about the mouse-coloured skin that grows this peaceful slumbering middle-class Solihull place. With approval, he spent a population of 25,000 one new agent manager to sell 8 copies of OZ, I know 4 of the people who buy it so well I mess one in a dirty article (Wog Beach Shock) quadrach! Jerry Quattrachi as in Gad! wrote about how all good true 'hippies' should invade the black Italy place . . . could we have a few pleasant peasant diggers come blow out their minds. Even if you don't actually publish this could you do something, tell or send somebody. We have pleasant green-bladed perks.

the main thing is COME BUM IN SOLIHULL.

Dear Sir,

The OZ No 10 'Pornography of Violence' impressed me very much with the humor of violence, but it left me more confused than ever.

What confuses me is this, on the 'Quattrachi' poster of OZ No 8 was written 'Quattrachi is dead. Long Live Quattrachi'. Wondering who Quattrachi was I forgot about it until I read in 'Radio Times' Sunday 11 February (3rd Programme).

Ch. Quattrachi who died last November, has left behind a reputation comparable to that of the legendary heroes of the past. In this talk, Peter Calvert discusses the theory and practice of guerrilla warfare and assesses the achievements of Quattrachi as a guerrilla leader.

Does this mean that the producers of OZ condemn all violence provided it is anti-consumer and support violence which is pro-consumer?

Do they love the capitalists and hate the capitalists?

Do the people behind OZ have a batch of machine gun hidden behind those innocent looking flowers?

If this what 'Flower Power' is all about, count me out.

Sincerely,
Colin Cunningham

P.S. I will be very surprised if you publish this letter but if you don't I suppose I'll have to try 'International Times'.

Dear Sir,

Allen Mason's articles have rightly picked him up on the question of the necessity of rules and regulations for the raising of my community. But I think he was trying to say that the whole idea, is the emphasis on competitiveness in games both athletic and academic is fundamentally anti-educational. It is a hindrance to the growth of intelligence and sensitivity. Nevertheless he seems to have a pretty bad ship.

My earlier experience was that, with notable exceptions, teachers at St Paul's expected the image of themselves as benevolent dictators.

The perfect system (ostensibly democratic) was their system - not ours. For the crime of being found out by a prefect for passing into a common art milk-bottle at break, I was called before the High Master. He obviously thought I had done something else - maybe I had, I can't quite remember. I was severely understanding and, to my utter embarrassment, confessed to a somewhat similar school-boy error myself. Was I really happy then, he asked? The next scene is the apartment with the so-called prefect giving me encouraging smiles as I worked off any energy in the proper way.

The incident surely suggests that a mild conflict of values has been going on for some time, and all it has produced is the new psychological, open-ended approach to the culture of education. I had hoped psychology was winning.

Yours sincerely, R N Parkhurst (42)

April 21st, 1966, marks the black anniversary of the military junta's takeover in Greece. The regime has spent the last six months tightening its grip on the country, by appointing its own men to key positions in all areas of public administration, and by making the "with of necessity" a pre-requisite to the right to work.

In the recent report of Amnesty International it stated, 102 10-641 "The Security Police and Military Police are unrestricted today in Greece. Since, in Mr Petroski's words, "the law sleeps", the police may arrest anyone, in any place, at any time, with no obligation to charge him or inform anyone of his arrest". From the details given in this report, it is no exaggeration to state that the methods employed by the Greek security police, including torture, sadism, and blackmail, have not been paralleled in the Western world since the heyday of Nazism.

Resistance to the regime within Greece grows stronger. Two major resistance movements, Democratic Defence and Patriotic Front, organized by representatives of all political parties, outlawed since last April, are working together for a common aim... the establishment of a democratic government in Greece. The hope for Greece rests at the moment with D.D., and P.F., but they must be able to rely on support from democrats all over the world.

All those in this country who are outraged by the military regime's very existence, let alone their barbarous methods, and who wish to express their support for the Greek resistance movement, will have the opportunity to do so at a Rally to be held at Trafalgar Square on Sunday, April 21st, at 2.30 pm. This will be followed by a march via Downing Street to the Greek Embassy - letters of protest will be delivered at both.

The actress Melina Mercouri will be coming from New York specifically for this demonstration, and will speak at Trafalgar Square, together with Greek Democratic Movement leaders, and invited representatives of the political, trade union, religious, academic, and artistic world. It is hoped that the R.E.C. Greek Service will receive the voiced approval of all those present for a resolution condemning the military regime and expressing solidarity with the Greek resistance movement. The will later be broadcast to Greece. Yours sincerely, what ever happened to Toni Bennett? According to an interview in the latest issue of Shadows, she's doing better than ever. When asked about her work, she responded simply: "There are no magical acts of providence, no 'miracles' as much as I wish I had. I want to offend things. Let it put my encounter in perspective and leave it at that." Bennett's readers pop at "misleading" words. "I grew up there, close to it, like the audience. I want sort of people like me, how they grew and I grew around. I try to make myself a sensitive creature." A rock?

Raymond Popadopoulos, P.O. Box 40-21 Green Freddie Kelly Committee.

The most important short film festival in the world took place in Tours, France, at the end of January. It received no English coverage, except a small and slightly snooty place in that well known cinema's bible, The Financial Times. All right, it's only the way, but as a matter of fact the Grand Prix was won by an Englishman (the prize was an original sculpture by Jean Arp worth £750). Not a English was there.

This particular prize-winning Englishman has never had the public recognition he deserves despite heavy-weight critical accolades that are a black-writer's dream. On

For one lovely week there will be no necessity to watch underground movies lying full-length on a rubber floor at the Astor Lab. From 12-20th April the National Film Theatre is mounting an 'underground' week which will include works by such notable anti-film makers as Warhol, Marjopoulos, Bruce Connor, Stan Brakhage, Harry Smith and Ron Rice. Don't miss 'The Match Girl' by New York's Andrew Davis.

The feature film 'Charley Harper', directed by Albert Finney (who now writes a 10-puller hat and sports) is not quite the smash success the publicity boys here would have us believe. In fact, no New York distributor would touch it unless Mr Finney played the lead on Broadway in 'A Day in the Death of Joe Egg' so they could cash in by publicising the great sentence.

'Spoke File' is just that. A hotchpotch of editorial and outside contributions. Writers this month include John Willcock (Oyster Science), Bruce Benavente and Peter Surinam.

On average, every 100th person in the United States is Hispanic. That's a lot of people. And that's why the Hispanic community is so important to the future of this country. We need to make sure that everyone has a voice in the decisions that will shape our future.

One of the biggest challenges we face is the lack of political representation. We need more Hispanic leaders in our government, in our schools, and in our communities. We need to make sure that our voices are heard and that our needs are met. We need to work together to create a more just and equitable society for all.

Hispanic youth are the future of our country. We need to invest in them, to provide them with the education and resources they need to succeed. We need to make sure that they have the same opportunities as everyone else. We need to create a future where everyone has a chance to thrive.

Age of Youth

The youth of the Hispanic community are a source of pride and hope. They are the ones who will carry on the traditions and values of their ancestors while also embracing the opportunities of the modern world. They are the ones who will lead the way to a better future for all.

Hispanic is only the Beginning

Hispanic is not just a label. It is a rich and diverse culture with a long and proud history. It is a culture that has contributed so much to the United States. We need to celebrate and preserve our heritage while also embracing the future.

Hispanic youth are the future of our country. We need to invest in them, to provide them with the education and resources they need to succeed. We need to make sure that they have the same opportunities as everyone else. We need to create a future where everyone has a chance to thrive.

effused on the draft, and how to end it. A real school for the deep south. Art of the streets, art for and from the people. You name it. You do it. Everyone participates — every man a creator.

8. We'll have yippies dressed like Vietnam warblers, the streets are shaking from the ordinary American politicians. We'll edit the right-wing crowd with short hair yippies veterans who at the power summit will blow minds with speeches like: "Now, these yippies have something to say..."

9. Guerrilla theatre groups from all over the country will be there. The day before LBJ arrives in Chicago we will rehearse to the evergreen poem that LBJ will arrive at 2 am at O'Hare Airport. And it will be our own LBJ who will be greeted enthusiastically by the yippies, honored by a motorcade through Chicago, and then on to a hotel for a press conference to announce America's withdrawal from Vietnam. You are doing it.

10. Yippies plan to pour their cans like cabs, pick up delegates, and drop them off in Wisconsin. We are infiltrating the hotels with bull-boys, cooks. We are also infiltrating the press.

11. We'll also have our own theatre convention, we'll nominate Royce P. Hogg, a pig made out of vegetables, for President and LBJ for Vice President. After Hogg is nominated, we will kill him and eat him. And we will say to America: "You nominate a President and he eats the people. At our convention we nominate a President, and we eat him."

12. The youth festival will dramatize the nation's most massive collection and individual acts of resistance. One night 100,000 people will burn draft cards at the same moment, with the first spelling out "Beat Army". The next day all the gymnasiums will read signed letters to the politicians confessing their act, and will encourage more young men to follow them.

This day is not to be unique in that it must be a bottom-up revolution to succeed. Heavy preparation is naturally needed. You are needed to work on it and to make it happen. It will not be done for you. We have opened up a coordinating office at 11 P. Rabin 800, 22 Union Square East, New York, New York 10003, Phone (212) 582-5090, and we are there coordinating information.

At the same time as the American Youth Festival (AYF), youth festivals may take place all over the world, dramatizing the youth international revolution.

The Chicago power structure, especially Mayor Daley, is not going to be thrilled about our using Grant Park. But with hundreds and thousands of us, what are they going to do? It is our human right. We are confident of meeting a permit to use Grant Park.

That week in Chicago will be a living theatre of America. King will be there, also Gregory, also Spence and the peace movement. The Communists will probably have to travel from hotel to convention hall by helicopter. Johnson will be nominated under military guard, under the protection of bayonet and the Army. Even if Chicago does not burn, the games and guilt of the government will force them to bring thousands of troops, and the more troops, the better the theatre.

A lot of troops will have to stay and watch at long hair fronts them out, diverting troops from the black continent. And the yippies, being wanderers, will be all over the city.

Lyndon Johnson and his Democratic Party gang cannot rule this country — it is becoming clearer every day. The choice is between the life of American youth or of the American Establishment. For those who don't see that now, Chicago will be an eye-opener.

Yippies!

There's a lot of fun with Shodor-Zerkle English accents and English speakers' misadventures and intellectual joustings in their foreignness (and their enthusiasm to total foreignness with "Noooo! Nature only makes it a pre-history. Now reveal that history is anything other than pre-history is just a hard day's journey, is it? Yeah. Everything out there is the well-sifted dust of the new things that have been here since everything is dead or something. Just, history also is just the apparently not-yet-dead or the apparently dead. The reason that is is in fact the fact that history is in its state is as on history! It's dead. (and had you Dylan's name (John Wesley Harding) there is not only non-history, but also pre-histories. Anyway, his geography book is a specific historical-geographical model, and the only

Some 117 policemen carried these double pay. They came in character laughing and they went home in an ambulance. Though they despised every thing they got. They were smart and brutal. Not at home at the 'Zoo' or the Spanish Civil Guard or the Dutch 'Nazi' would have been. But they were brutal. Some of them were hurt being beat all. Callaghan fears.

But the demonstration failed. Demonstrably. After all those martyrship plans, no one did get through to splash the Embassy with blood. Most of it was conducted at Henson. No one was prepared to rock their neck, own and lead, as Rod Rudi has been before, even to do in Germany. So, unorganized, the watch entered the square, substantially in one column and allowed police to contain it. They had only one entrance closed, a conventional convergence from three directions would have backed them completely.

But the march was planned to be non-violent. Oh! If demonstrators are to be non-violent, OK. March people through a residential area, 10,000 people tramping through a suburban street would have a few Katie Boyles and Mrs. Thurdent and their sons to the windows and maybe shake their preconception as much as their moral alignment. But if marchers are to engage! Embassies, then plan and do the job properly.

If, if, our consciences are so wrought with Vietnam, reinforcing our faith with too paper ought hardly be a reason. Demonstration in London stop the police with a benign hand.

After the raid at Middle Earth, cleaners found 91 pieces of 'gear' on the floor. Today, a month after the raid, the proprietor Paul Williams has yet to be charged. But the police have all the time in the world," he says, rather optimistically. And last week, five Court Balls were held to provide legal funds for those busted and for the Club, just in case.

Wildcat reports no harassment since the raid. But its hardly surprising. A dozen policemen are through here every weekend. They have an underground of their own. Kids were willing to accept. The cops must have scored pretty often.

Now, every single person who comes into the club has to sign a declaration saying he does not have drugs in his possession. And we don't let any of the known dealers in. We throw people out. We really dislike the kids around now. They were very sweet before. Shitheads. Some of them were even smoking after the raid. I'm a heavy smoker. I haven't got occasion to smoke. I won't do time for a soft case. If there is any suspicion of the circumstances that led to the raid, I'll stone the place myself."

Joe Barker denies any knowledge of President. A friend of James Earl Ray's? But he has managed to liberate FIVE, the literary magazine he produces three times a year. The current issue, just available, describes itself as a dialogue between direct revolutionary action and cultural guerrilla warfare. Which is fairly fitting as it opens with a laughable sketch from Che Guevara's diaries of the rubber humping. Sleepy Guevara begins the story of the Cuban Revolution. The diaries then befell the 26 July Movement were at retirement and at home as the Keweenaw strip in a Mexican desert. However like all good 'W' movies about Revolution in Costa San Sebastian the Fidelista's make it. With odds against they created themselves a small not to them that Time war! here been on their side. Well, the NE Times.

Guevara is also a nice counterpart to poet Gary Snyder's Passage to more than India, a version of discovery whose Newfoundland is the under concept of 'Variety'. Julian Jack manages to hit at where the Living Theatre live, and Joe historical the Free University of New York - four-arms to E.T.'s Anti-University. If you still read Spike Hawkins, there are some beautifully illustrated poems to look at, 104 of us $1.50. Worth it. I hope a lot of people buy," says Joe. "The printer doesn't know we haven't got the time to pay for it yet." But at the last issue told out, three more every chance of a FIVE next time.

"The next thing what I told her turn up in the People, completely requested. I ring the Sunday Times and they said they had a lot of trouble like that from the People."

The name of the People reporter is Douglas Bruce. He lives at 10 Granville Court, N4, and on the telephone 3004 3174. One seldom may find obliged to keep him informed of underground news at all hours.

With Caroline, sadly interested in Amsterdam, the parties seem to have vanished from the scene. Well, almost. Because Bill L is about to make a comeback - among the newspapers. Yes, readers. In Radio Luxembourg about to be launched in a 1000 color-act throughout the land. Landmark Advertising Media plan to broadcast pay and what they call 'soft' music to all those housewives watching the dirty smutty show around the Westinghouse. Oh, and advertising.

The People's report on the Diggins was as condemnatory as the Press Council Report on the paper's methods in obtaining their national threat be.

Most of the information in the article was obtained under the guise that it was for the Sunday Times.

One of the Victims of the deception, 'Paradise' Hartley, who has been associated with the planning of the Forum on Communal Living is protesting to the Press Council. "They came round first of all, a man and a woman, saying that they were sympathetic to the Diggins team, which they'd read about in UZ and could they have more information. Then they came back again with a woman photographer, who kept saying things like, 'Do something symbolic of the Diggins movement.' This time the woman identified them as reporters and we were doing an article for the Sunday Times Colour Supplement. "Of course, we'd let you see the finished thing before we print it," she said.

Contraception

"MD" column is a reader's medical advice column which appears regularly in the Los Angeles Free Press — one of the world's best (underground) newspapers.

Question: I should like to know the physical dangers, if any, for the passive partner in anal intercourse. I enjoy that sexual experience very much.

Answer: Because of the many factors I receive from males and females concerning anal intercourse I recently consulted a noted proctologist. His opinion is that anal intercourse is not physically harmful when done in moderation. When performed frequently (and I don't ask me to define frequent!) there may be a tendency for the passive partner to develop either in life conditions usually found a decade or two later — such as hemorrhoids and a loosening of the anal sphincter or muscles controlling the anus.

Theoretically, one would expect a high incidence of urinary tract infections in the active partner because of the bacteria, which most commonly cause urinary tract infections, are normally found in the rectum. But clinically no increase in urinary tract infections in active partners has been observed.

Racial VD is a real danger of anal intercourse because the carrier usually has no symptoms. Both gonorrhea and syphilis may be found.

Sodomy is legal term for anal intercourse. It is a felony crime in most states punishable by long prison terms. The name is derived from the Bible story derived because of its "sickening" nature. What were they thinking in Genesis?

Question: My mom in New York keeps informing me of the latest anti-birth control news. What have you heard about new life effects from long term use? Is it true that their use can bring on diabetes if there is a history of it in the family?

My mother hates sex so I don't know when to believe her.

Answer: Several sensational articles have appeared recently in national magazines about the alleged dangers of birth control pills. They are based, in the main, on the observation by some physicians that young women on birth control pills seem to have a high incidence of blood clots forming in their legs, and, in some cases, of these clots traveling to the lungs. So far, there is no solid proof that blood clots form more frequently in those taking birth control pills. None to have evidence that birth control pills bring on diabetes mellitus, with or without a family history of the disease.

We do know that the normal late start of pregnancy are more common and more abrupt than those associated with the use of birth control pills.

They have been no reported ill effects from long term use of birth control pills that they have been used only in the last ten years.

Question: Can you give us some straight information about cigarette smoking? Do you think the habit is really harmful?

Answer: I think there is little doubt that cigarette smoking causes lung cancer, emphysema and perhaps heart disease.

Since the US Surgeon General's report on the association between smoking and lung cancer, 85,000 MD's have given up smoking. Today, only 21% of all MD's smoke cigarettes and only 16% of those under the age of 35.

The tobacco industry spends more on advertising than any other industry. They are very successfully selling death.

Reader's Postscript: The reader who wrote you about the "burn-jobs" divulged a new and beautiful secret indeed, but here you heard of a necessary job? It is similar to the "burn-jobs" swimming during federal anti-segregation, but instead of burning down executives in a loud and voluntary experiment again.

It is important to maintain good contact while "floating" so that all the vibrations are not lost to the air.

Question: I am 65 years of age, married, and in excellent physical condition, which I maintain by working out weekly at the YMCA. My problem is that every so often while doing things, I have an orgasm. This prevents me from finishing my work but, but after relaxing in the hot room I seem to feel better than ever.

Nevertheless, there are physical and moral implications which I would like to have cleared up.

1. Is this physically harmful?
2. Since I clearly know it is going to happen and continue the drive anyway, would the Catholic Church consider this masturbation and therefore a sin?

Answer: I suspect there is something about this situation which arouse you consciously or unconsciously. Aside from being unable to continue your workout, no physical harm seems possible. But you should consult your own physician who may wish to refer you for psychiatric consultation.

I am not widely renowned as a Catholic theologian so I suggest you consult a priest in order to find out whether the situation you mention is considered sinful in the eyes of the Church.

Question: I have been told there is a penicillin tablet available by prescription which can be taken 30 minutes before intercourse and 20 minutes after which will effectively prevent venereal infection. What do you think of the effectiveness of such a program?

Answer: Not much. As you suggest, most venereal infections could be prevented by prophylaxis or preventive use of penicillin.

But such a program would do far more harm than good for the following reasons:

1. Bacteria such as those which cause gonorrhea are becoming more resistant to penicillin therapy. If everyone dropped a penicillin tablet each time he had sex, it would only be a matter of time before the drug was totally ineffective for treating V.D. There is a growing fear among public health officials that this may happen in the foreseeable future.
2. The more one is exposed to a drug like penicillin, the greater his chances are of developing an allergy to it, and many people are sensitive to penicillin already. The chance of dying from a penicillin reaction is greater than from a venereal disease.

Question: I had a vaginal discharge and terrible itching so I saw my doctor. He told me I had a yeast infection and prescribed vaginal suppositories. What is a yeast infection? Is it necessarily caused by sex? Is it contagious? (I like a lady friend and sex)

Answer: Next to trichomonas vaginitis, yeast infections, known as the yeast cause of vaginal inflammation. The same organism, Candida albicans, causes "thrush" in the mouths of children. In fact, an important cause of thrush in children is transmission from the mother during childbirth.

Yeast are often present in the vagina, without causing symptoms. But when broad spectrum antibiotics are given intravaginally, for example, normal vaginal bacteria are killed, thus allowing the yeast organisms to grow and multiply. Certain women are especially susceptible to vaginal infections. Symptoms of vaginal infections are a vaginal discharge, irritation of the vulva (the lips of the vagina) and itching.

The same symptoms may be caused by other infections, such as trichomonas or, less commonly, gonorrhea. That's another reason for seeing a doctor whenever these symptoms occur. I've known girls that borrow medication from girlfriends because they think they have the same disease. But a pelvic and microscopic examination is necessary for often there are "mixed" vaginal infections.

Treatment includes application of gentian violet (which accounts for many purple bottoms) or vaginal suppositories. Vaginal infections are not transmitted by sexual contact but tend to recur so don't be discouraged if more treatment is necessary.

Question: I would like some advice on fasting during pregnancy. Is there any position that will not hurt a pregnant woman during the later months?

Answer: Most gynecologists advise against intercourse in the last month of pregnancy. But your own doctor undoubtedly has his own theory. By that time the only feasible position is back to back.

In 1940s some scientists of the Genetics school wondered what effect intercourse had on the psyche of the unborn child. Imagine the father floating in warmth and darkness. Suddenly he is subjected to thumping, buffeting and other phenomena. Are there any readers who remember?

Question: After a recent session with acid, I noticed severe pain in the joints of my knees, my neck and my groin. Is this common, is it me, or is it the acid?

Answer: LSD users have often reported muscle aches and aching in the joints under the effects of the drug. Whether this is due to the effects of LSD or whether the user does not move about as he usually does is unclear.

I have observed similar effects in Africans given the hallucinogenic root Tabernaemontana (bush). At intervals during ceremonial dance, the limbs of the person are stretched apparently to prevent muscle cramps.

Question: I've heard that the intensity of a woman's orgasm is somehow proportional to the intensity of her orgasm — a very convoluted phrase, a very convoluted phrase. A newspaper has said this statement is not to be trusted at all. Would you please comment?

Answer: Seems to me I've heard that statement but I don't know of any evidence supporting this statement. I'm certain there are many who would be willing to join in a research project to settle the question.

Orthodox Politics: Power as Freedom

It is ironic that the Conservative party, which proclaims itself as the party of individual enterprise and freedom, appeals to a certain order as the authoritarian party. While the left, which advocates planning, control and bureaucratic administration, is ordered by the majority of anarchists and libertarians.

The paradox is resolvable, of course. The Conservative idea of freedom is freedom for power and money to have full rein. It tends for freedom for top people: the others need discipline, and they like it well as well, weak, rather power structures for themselves must be discouraged. Conversely, the Socialist argument is that as a democratic bureaucracy enables top people to be controlled by those below. State ownership is public ownership. Thus more control of the powerful few means more freedom for the many with little power. And a great battle in British politics is for the party for those who can't decide whether the Socialists, giving of power to those below will cut down their own position more than the Conservatives, giving of power to those above. The recent history of English politics can be written in terms of the unrelenting of the large middle group. In 1800, the country gentry and the hereditary aristocracy (the Tory party) — as a minority of political power and wealth — challenged by the rising industrialists and some merchants (the Whigs). The result was a merger (now, the public school network). 1945 represented a second major adjustment in favour of the working classes (the Welfare State) and until recently in government circles. With economic crises, the result is less certain.

Socialists try to make bureaucracy a "third force", as between the top few and the many. In fact, it is infiltrated by public school personnel, so enriched with private property, so dependent on foreign and domestic capital, that it often has to further, and obey the "system" it intended to check and transform. Labour ignorantly does the Tories' dirty work (during the Second World War, a scholarship boy, it carries the can, loses it, never before it rises over the Conservative side, it is shown and gets looked out by an angry populace until just before the next big crisis, when every thing happens all over again.

The Conservative attitude of bureaucracy, is almost too obviously motivated to need comment. The role of disciplining the lower classes can be left to poverty or, where humanisation won't allow that, to a combination of poverty, incentives and the narrow spirit (which by preventing the employees from combining keeps wages down). The task of the leaders is to discipline that on, lose the freedom not to compete, and the power which that bestows.

The underlying Conservative authoritarianism appears readily enough in attitudes to students, long hair, compulsory games, lockers, coded codes, bringing back the thumb-screw, etc. The effect of all this is controlled out by another paradox. Mass organisations have to be power structures too, eg. trade unions without the closed shop are heading for helplessness. Even the family — attempts are for the sake of one's freedom. Very puzzling.

Less obvious is the interior ambivalence of bureaucratic and trade union structures. Each union exists to defend its members not only against the boss class, but against non-union members of one's own class, not forgetting those lower in the scale. Second, any organisation large enough to sustain itself, to become a class in itself. Current rifts between union

Those who are unempathetic to anarchists are quick to see how informal sanctions could prove inadequate, how the machinery of force may have to be called on, to prevent one man or group misusing his own freedom by misusing everyone else's. The anarchist underdog may become the Fascistic overlord. Is the St Valentine's Day Massacre the classic symbol for anarchism in action? De Sade would have argued that it was, and said that anarchism was nothing if it had not overcome the sanctions within as well as those without. The right-wing stress on enterprise and laissez faire, has a very real anarchist to it, albeit a non idealistic one, and if we admit de Sade is an anarchist, we can't deny the title to the cut-throat competitor. We conclude with two varieties of anarchism. Right wing anarchism which accepts the aggravation of the differences between individuals, as opposed to left wing anarchism, which professes minimisation and egalitarianism. There is anarcho anarchism, which weakens the laws, and has flourished at some intensely creative periods of human history, notably Renaissance Italy. And there is rascally anarchism, where one group makes the laws for others. Though Nazism is a very obvious form, it's not historically rare (it's how the Normans ran England after the Conquest). If pressures are sufficient, any sense of law can break down, and a state of black anarchy supervenes, whereby absolutely arbitrary behaviour, backed by brute force, have no need of laws at all. Rich Romans used to demonstrate their riches by pissing in the mouths of their most expensive slaves, who either learned to hold it in their mouths without swallowing, or very rapidly died.

No doubt a society based on internal and neighbourly constraints is feasible. It certainly is on the level of the foodgathering and hunting tribe, indeed chiefs (as opposed to leaders) don't appear until man has progressed to the pastoral agricultural stage. An economic situation favourable to a new kind of foodgathering (pleasure gathering) may be on its way. No doubt too society could bear much less onerously on the individual than the present tendency to multiply and maximise every kind of constraint. This is a reaction to today's split second, pushbutton, highway-code-and-breathalyser semi-automation, at once too automated and not automated enough. But the reaction is paroxysm and self-perpetrating, and, all right physics aside, is one of the most useful targets of hippie activity. It's gratifying too that the boring Christian Wilhelm Goethe has to resort to fiction to put forth the Lord of the Flies view, that a few months on an island without adult supervision would turn all our kids into gibbering cannibals (The Jesuits knew better when they said, Give us a child for the first year, and we'll keep him for life).

Monotonously, though, white anarchists spoil their case by a simple-minded romanticism, pointing to the Polynesians or the Eskimos or the little green men on the flying saucers. Polynesians had free love all right, so long as the lovers were of the right race-caste; if they weren't, and got caught, they were clubbed to death, for not respecting asperthood. The merry Eskimos may invite you to laugh with their wife, but wife-stealing leads to so many murder-type killings, at which the community convicts, that in some groups every man has been directly involved in an ad hoc execution. The argument that sexual liberationism will make violence unpopular is like the argument that aeroplanes will make walking unpopular. Whether walking is frustrated, flying has nothing to do with the case. And one might argue, with Freud, that leering is like drinking and fighting is like sexing, and both activities go pretty well together, which is why 'only the brave deserve the fair'. Maybe man is, intrinsically, a tragic, and rather nasty, clown.

Maybe he could manage an anarchist community. But it won't be 'natural'. It'll be a cultural tour-de-force, subject to internal and external pressures. It'll be the result of a few thousand years of fumbling, it'll be a cultural triumph, and a precarious balance. Far from ending humanity's problems, it'll have to justify itself by the quality of life within it while it lasts, for it will in itself be no better equipped to last than any other mode of government.

Will it, even then, be more than another form of control? Will it amount to more than conditioning people to their inner values and community expectations then? "Conscience don't make cowards of us all", and so does "What'll the neighbours say". Of course, pressures may make towards diversity, innovation and social responsibility, rather than towards conformity, conservatism, and a kind of glacial inhibitedness, which we associate these tabus with now. But pressures there will be. And it could be argued that one is, potentially, freer in a complex, plural society which works by external constraints (law and force), which leave you a much better chance of getting away with mind hugging your individuality to yourself. Maybe, of course, freedom isn't in individuality at all, and the natural bias of anarchism is communism. And this still won't solve the problem of external controls being controls.

Automated effluence is the well-known crack-of-jade. Even if it's there, the transition won't be easy, and even if poor old backwater Britain makes it in the end, it will be so far behind everybody else that their scraps glaze for further tears (for example, if non-automated British industry has to compete with automated industries, then the British worker will have to work longer hours for less pay, and then it'll get worse before they get better). And the Third World lies in ambush. It's very romantic to support everybody from Mao to Che to Fidel to Stokely against square old Mum and Dad, but it's a situation that leads to sudden conversions, especially since the wretched of the earth are quite likely to, undesireably, turn on each other, as being easier nuts to crack, than on the West, whose internal liberals is the same qua non for hippedoms anyway. If you disapprove of friendships, then you may wish to not be on the side of the rich, and their fore-kindly, homeland, for all.

But let's suppose the world slips by the Scylla of World War 3, how can it scrape past the Charybdis of a population explosion? It's worth a bet that our lifestyles will soon happen rising (1 per person), with 1 chance for sale, (unless we have a Labour Government, which will forbid it). Thanks to Guy, there will be a virtual sanitation of sea, and though this may suit many a treasure hippie (it'll be very hard on many's parental and maternal temperaments).

Maybe, then, automated effluence will turn boredom into the psychological equivalent of oppression. A safe society will put every man in stupa pupillen forever. Changar will be just a ghost in a machine, touch on for enforcement only. It'll begin falling apart, into a hunt for piecemeal transcendental, sensory pleasures. Or it will settle on marginal status symbols, and the ratrace resumes, with no winners, only losers, a phony on a treadmill. A thousand flowers of paranoia will bloom. Masscham will do the job of social insurance, a Sheldrake type 'hunt' of people will pass the time, since the few remaining animals will be more precious than human life. Will all this be worse than society now? No, but it'll be no less

If one can't be a pop star, or the ideal hippie, the most fortunate person to be is a spring of the country gentry, but whose family have been in business and in Chelsea for a generation or two. Girls are luckier than boys because their schools mark them less. But the alert and questioning boys can emerge pleasantly sensitive to others' tastes with environment. You have the time to stand and stare. You can have your two and a-half day weekend, and your long business lunch, and your office hours run something like quarter to ten to half past twelve and quarter to three to half past four. Just the right amount of gentle stimulus, leaving you full of energy for the evening's fun. You're sensibly cynical, you have the wherewithal to being, you have a generous self confidence, which you soaked up at your mother's knee. And quite apart from the pleasant authoritative style the birds are naturally chafed up by, mannerisms are no detail in the fluid society. Poor old Scholarship Fred will never learn that affable authority, or that authoritative affability, which seduces all sexes. From all points of view the establishment committees are right to emphasize style above qualifications. For many purposes, academic qualifications are mediated along with middle-class, ie, a wrong, style. If a middle-class fellow has changed style he's probably changed attitudes too, and if he hasn't yet, he soon will, as friendships and habits accumulate. The well-up-class lad has to change twice, first to the schoolroom spent, then to an upper-class style, and one in a thousand times will make it. Nor does the establishment, today, object to its Bertrand Russell, its Rud Deen, they only go to show its tolerance, its diversity, its absence of class. And it knows it needs its divergent voices, a moderate diversity of responses is an excellent adaptive mechanism. And what if this bland crust of gentlemanly inefficiency really suffocates the nation? The upper-class old boy net will still be sitting on top, lapping up with the Schindlers and the Duvals - too bad about the Jammers, but unemployment is very good for labour discipline. And if one is rather inefficient, well, one mustn't become too obsessed with efficiency, must one, I mean, look at those Americans, rushing about wasting money.

The Conservative attitude shows an establishing disaffection. On the one hand, although lip-service is paid to the new technological era, there is absolutely no urgency about improving technical, and other, education. Educated employees mean trouble. On the other hand, there is a certain haste about getting into the Common Market. Given gentlemanly sloth, the impetuous to competition's cry blazes may seem anachronistic. But such 'responses' will have three results. English capital and contacts will acquire European knowhow, and won't have to turn to the English for it. Second, European 'competition' will be the perfect excuse for further attacks on restrictive practices (ie, the trade unions). Third, competition will eliminate the tangled undergrowth of small inefficient firms and give a clearer run to the larger corporations. Fourth, a small group of international organizations will have vastly more power (viewed, not only abroad, which will stagger along being British, for the next century or so, long after business has understood that going into Europe means disturbing patriotism), but view as individual governments. Maybe in a hundred years or so there will be an efficient European bureaucracy, but between now and then the Common Market will be the businessmen's Paradise. In fact the left can hardly oppose it, so large looms the menace of American financial colonization, and the impossibility of following un-American policies without some such unity.

Yesterday I subscribed to the 'New Statesman'. Today I am just Reasonable, Good, & Dead...

Flowers are not inevitable. They blossom only in our land (poor and ruined) shaded by rampant and white puffy clouds, the only acceptable leaf for an ornate and exchangeless.

But we should not sit there just waiting for our silver tugging to drive away the storm. From time to time it is salutary to look into the eye of the giant of darkness. If we wish, he might blink, and terror might recede for a moment in his wasteland.

But stories, carefully chosen, should testify us.

Hence this:

1913. A baby of homocidalist colonialism, its good intentions matched by fully clothed reason and responsible aim, was born in England. It was christened "the New Statesman". (The emergence of the left.) May a thing it has survived, thanks to its national armor and considerable good will. It is still with us, fifty-five years later, imparting relative judgments to the people who are only relatively grey, and would (but do so much) like themselves and the world to be better, if only...

If only people could see Reason, Truth, Justice (see "social justice"), Def. Dict. and the Common Good. Only they can't.

That is why the New Statesman still reports its position with candor, in broadness, judiciously choosing its words, carefully offering its metaphors, because the flesh is weak, of course, but somebody, somewhere, has to keep on with the good work. Nothing much has changed, for our master: the rich are richer, the poor are just as poor (despite poverty, you say). And the good only wait on Harpist's Heats on Saturday afternoon, the New Statesman and the hopes with them unto the darkness of the sky and give way to darkness, which already exists. And it's time for dinner.

Occasionally, one of the spoken (if Freeman, former NS Editor) leaves the hole where wisdom is breathed in with the air, and descends to the place where periferous reality is turned down the throat (Ambassador to New Delhi and now to Washington). The twenty thousand NS readers (perhaps) will die of age, cancer and wife, fatal diseases to men of good conscience. Let them live in peace, and in peace die, peace of mind provided for them by the eternal weekly attainments of the "pink pill".

23 33% super-sustaining leader, 23% (underestimated) backbone (transforming information), the rest is just literary colossus, as the charcoal provides, according to need, shot, and the state of the market.

Correction should be sober and yet appealing, designed for a customer of good taste and not unworried of modern trends. It is strongly recommended not to introduce words (verbs) which could shock the patient. His correct thinking (left brand) should be encouraged by our product (to be taken as weekly dose). Signed, the General Editor Manager, the god of Reason and Human Progress. Trust we (temporarily) suspended, the Labour Party.

Of course from our flowerbed, capital and other in caricature, defined by the bonds of the world outside (the Western state only and true happiness) we have been obvious to the multi-form-chemistry of the enemy's ideology. Too occupied with dinner for refusal we have overlooked the pathetic NS War an ancient statue which goes so well with the square that you don't see it.

You might not know about the NS.

And you should, because in preference (less), when all that young people could do was to dream of forbidden crutches and forbidden ideology, they could do this moral bond, were a Hesperian to have the analysis of their mind on, must have helped.

Maybe NS helped.

If you dare and care, remember the dark eyes when the young poor were lost in contact by the English shilling, and the young and to poor by Oxford and luxury. The magazine was then a general reminder of the neighborhood to be sure, a naive illustration that all will be well in the end, in spite of the church spires and the Kappa factor. Because who knows what is made a privileged pair of trousers, and under a broader hat, when the time of reckoning comes?

But since then, the cross centres have fallen, the halcyons of the body of the poor and the holy communion of the middle of the rich have stripped the land bare. In the pitch dark illuminated by fireworks of death the candle of the New Testament pale and warm, the halo of light, murder, and the seek

The regular price might not ever have come off the shelf.

But in the thousands of others self-proclaimed people who read this column, the first of the five days of abstinence following the five days of indulgence, now called self-improvement, is spent in a modern age and sex unmoderated usually going through the reader, one eye to the machine, one eye to the line. A performance of skill, for the cleanliness of body and mind, in one go. The species has survived against the odds, fed on Penguin Books and Boston television sets; it demands the right number at the right time, looking moderately well in moderate light in moderately comfortable apartments in mortgage at moderate price with money earned in moderately successful jobs, possibly in positions where they can moderately advance their mind, which gets moderately new, moderately moderately new holidays which will moderately last, moderately and moderately.

Their lives have problems, and each one of them needs rescue. There are two kinds of sinners, those raised by parents, life and those raised for rock.

do jobs. The private ones are called market assets. The public ones are called political assets.

The major issues are, first, - Sex, And its corollaries: the family, divorce, the children, house design, gardening, cooking, the language, the generation gap and the pill. About these most problems, one cannot give a definite answer, but only a basic set of values, and of course, there is a wide spectrum of justifiable attitudes. Basically, sex, and all the corollaries go under one simple commitment: they shall not hurt other people's feelings.

The political issues are: social justice (also advocates, in moderation of course), Capitalism: the economy, redundancy, the colour problem, poverty (see footnotes on third world), the cost of living, education, national assistance, the welfare state and of course South Africa.

There isn't really a simple answerment for all of them, and that is precisely why the New Testament was invented, so one can have, from week to week, an articulate and flexible answer, goodman in testimony, so to speak.

But life is more complex, it's not only a matter of having the Arctos answer to the issues. Every NS reader knows that. This is why the second part of the NS deals with the facts of the spirit, so put it clearly, with Art. And the only guiding light there is star Art is opened. A spirit, in all ages, everywhere, under any circumstance. Art can never be performed, or destroyed, or even harassed by any dictatorship or power. Every New Statistman reader knows that. Also, every reader knows in his heart of hearts that I (Michael Sargent) be destroyed by the atomic threat, and that Reagan and Mandela shall prevail. That is why the NS, first and second parts, are there.

Casualties and ill-wishers to the Labour Party will be quick to criticise the new coalition government. It is true that in the past this journal has had some hard things to say about Harold Wilson, and the other two members of his ruling triumvirate, Robert Maxwell and Cecil King. The fact remains that only the Germans can fail to welcome the new regime in Downing Street. Their policy as yet remains unclear. It is known, of course, that the triumvirate has declared itself against 'Blacks, Beggars, and Bolsheviks,' a declaration which the New Statesman has no hesitation in declaring abhorrent.

Yet, what is the alternative? For a while one such alternative lay in the hands of the political group now imprisoned and awaiting trial for treason against the Monarch. It is indisputable that this group, commanding the support of the entire left, had much to be argued in its favour. Yet they were Socialists and although — as this journal has stated many times in the past — the Idea of Socialism has something to be said for it, one thing that cannot be said is that it is an ideology with which to run Great Britain. So, while there should be criticism of the manner in which this group was outlawed, and outright protest at the torture and summary execution of its leaders, it would be futile to refuse, on these grounds alone, a welcome to the new men.

At all costs a bloodbath must be avoided. In this respect the new regime has acted with commendable dispatch. On the economic front it has moved with equal resolution, and its decision to face facts and finally solve the balance of payments problem by selling Scotland to a consortium of Swiss bankers is heartening news. The time is surely past for murmurs about the mythical goons of Zurich.

Perhaps it should be stressed once again that we will wholeheartedly endorse decent policies which render more lustre to the lives of ordinary men and women. It must be admitted that the misuse of the Queen's prerogative was a severe blow. Nonetheless, an exciting time lies ahead for Britons. This journal finds it hard to remember what precise policy it most recently advocated. No matter. It has been true, it is true, and it always will be true, that the time for words is past.

□ I wonder how many NS readers know that in going on in Vancouver, B.C.? The anti-chipmunk campaign there is being staged out with exciting brutality. Asquith, in his famous memorandum to Lloyd George on the subject of chipmunk slaughter, had done what the foundations of what should be a self-respecting British policy in this delightful business. Small hope, though, of the government taking the lesson to heart! The chipmunk benefit concert last night at Lady Duggan's understated official party. And a whisper to old readers: Leonard Woolf is coming back in our new literary edition!

Any little spirit or bubble I might have, my books (reformed on, would cost 1s. per row, (See Roger Oppen's piece on page 56) or How the Poor Grow Poorer). We had a brief important about correspondence in which I found some difficulty in getting my words across, although in fact I was not asked to do so and our discussion was probably hypothetical. Afterwards Fred the Bishop Philip returned to us in the room to some talks regarding some extraordinary ability. I pulled it away back to the kitchen, but feeling 10 has my money's worth. The upper class, I'm afraid, do know how to enjoy themselves. NS readers take care!

The Knight Errant's Story

J. B. PRIESTLEY

Ever since my old friend Harold Wilson asked me to call round and see him last week, to offer me the post of Minister of Culture in his party formed coalition government, I have been asked to answer the same question. 'Why, Jack?', they ask, 'why did you accept, when it is surely clear that the job will interfere with your work on Cable of the Old Lady, your vast new trilogy on the youth of the scientist?'

I have put the same question to myself. Nor is the answer quite as simple as modern peddlers of the slickly superficial response would make us think. Most of them are under twenty-five years of age. Fortunately, the unique powers of mind I now find within myself, the fruits of an extremely rich and long lifetime of experience, supplied the proper reply to the dilemma.

'Well', said the Prime Minister, leaning across his desk towards me — I saw immediately that reason and tolerance would never desert this worried countenance — 'I want the young folk cleaned up. Close the discotheques and strip-tease shows. Send the vagabonds to the Isle of Wight, Curfew at nine o'clock. Such a move is long overdue. I thought for a moment, curiously turning over my Yorkshire accent, "Yes, lad," I answered, "more follow-folow, more piny of the heart. The answer to the problem is not that."

Had I not taken the job, some sterile, white-coated men of science, some spry expert in technology, would certainly have stepped in. A man without any visible defects, my extra dimension of the understanding, my awareness of myth, and consequently incapable of mistaking to the real needs of young folk. For, what they truly want, no such smartifice could possibly supply. The frustrated youth of your day, in fact, have a wish to be like me. The young folk want dreams; they've been given storms, by their men without imagination.

TELEVISION

Well, yes...

FRANCIS HOPE

One often asks oneself whether whether the pre-arranged (night, Fowler) of British events really, well, since what they're actually doing, I suspect Oswald, they're in Gravetyne (TV's Rediffusion) by the name whether. A terrible pun, one might object, loved I not Chit Chat (television). But then, do you and I, as I've heard liberals with a phlegm think, really know what we're saying, one asks oneself as well. I think so, certainly (though I'm not), but who's to say, really, whether we can say anything which is not a little bit of something else. There's a dilemma for someone, tried out by it, I've heard over and not enough the tolerance of New Yorker, a new programme on the Arts that looked just as tried out as I felt. One doesn't know what to think, really. Would you want your child to be a Grammar School?

tion or heart. Is it surprising then that they have turned into a generation of fifty million, clad in burlesque colours, their heads ringing with pompous words, shouting poems they themselves don't comprehend. Under the new regime they will have more of a chance.

The ancient haunting myth that the shape colour and form from the innermost magic depths of our being are the key to all this. In my own depths — I will open and not closed as with so many people who have said goodbye forever to their childhood or youth, without arriving at the second one — there is a special access, a 'hot line' is now-forgotten (again), to these myths. I have realised this as my only real safeguard against the other colleges of our civilization. I will not, I will not, that the clothes-discovery be transformed into centres of myth-study along the lines of the Sunday-schools of our youth. The disavowal will become leading (these well stocked with myths). On the line of myth the young folk will be encouraged to undertake walking tours. Marxism will be compulsory at the age of thirteen as I have always believed in the profoundly evil of a good-hearted normal woman upon my estate and central mass.

The young folk need a centre to their lives', I told Harold Wilson, 'more discipline will not do it. They want something that always there, which they can look up to. No new-fangled sciences will do. What is required — perhaps Trouble with film-makers is, they make films. The film, though activity of transferring something perceived to an hour or so of celluloid is commonly there to disturb and irritate what finally emerges. Rarely more annoying to them as Flamingo Pie (Cinema), a first work by Jean-Luc Godard. Sentimental, it is an avowed edition of this myth; but the colour and photography fluctuate between great and deep, and the scene ended inconclusively. I found this Edgely of Godard rather than fruitful. The effect of celluloid water off faster than the effect of words on a page. The film is a very good one, but it is not a very good one. And this first effort of Godard's is less drawn from the classic Contre de Culture than inspired by it. Nevertheless, ending through the pattern of played girls towards a question of discipline, I was held not sometimes with sign.

FILMS

JOHN COLEMAN

more desperately than anything else — is a young people's edition of the New Yorker magazine, to provide the standing influence where our society needs it most. The New Yorker will start publication next week, edited by the old friend Malcolm Muggeridge, and will supply for the new generation that comfortable and harmless weekly expression of discussion, without which there is no stable, rooted society. Don't worry, Harold, lad. I concluded our interview. There's plenty of life in field myth yet.

NEW FICTION

An outrageous overstatement

QUILTON SPOTSWAITE

In these troubled times, it should be a relief to turn aside to the peace of literature. So it is a relief to turn over the pages of Professor Morris's latest book 'The Highest, new Keeper of the Queen's Office, is to be confronted upon his impudence, but upon little else. This apart, whose work on human beings was recently discussed by the New York Review of Books in one paragraph, but now turned by awkward attention to the (philosophy).

His method — entirely predictable in its simplicity — consisted of examining accounts on the Illustrated Heath armed with calm and tranquillity, and the inevitable anti-climax to record the tattered victim's responses. As is well-known — apart from one subject with a Daily Express in his pocket, and who turned out to be a tramp — the subjects were either in possession of a New Yorker, or quickly demanded one when they were in the interrogating chair and the first excitement of exposure had worn off. The author asserts that they '... feverishly crumbed the pages with expressions of glacial contentment, as what was obviously a timeless story.' Those deprived of the paper soon grew melancholic or unusually aggressive (usually had to be shut), but a little show of respect kept Professor Morris considered as follows. To be brief, this journal has broadly the same function for those using it as the tree, or lamp-post at the foot of which lower mammals deposit a trace of excremental suggestion of species. Only too eager to avoid this, the author, that the 'excremental' is more biological reality, and that 'intellectuals' are simply hominoid humans with a few pretensions.

Fortunately, no one need take Professor Morris too seriously. His curiously aquatic interpretation of the fact is typical of the scientific mind, a firm for scientific kind, indeed. Any science knows that the essential character of a class object is to possess over the name. It is merely preposterous to assert it's of our journal, which strives consistently to stay ahead of the times, and the work has a new Literary Editor, a new contributor, myself, and it's very true of article and not just being made, very one and question. After what felt earlier as an drive Morris!

Icarus

ON JUNE 14, 1968 DON'T BE WHERE ICARUS IS BECAUSE IF YOU ARE, YOU WON'T BE: IN SPACE IS A CHUNK OF ROCK & SPACE REFINED METAL, APPROXIMATELY 1.2 MILES' WIDE AND 300 YARDS THICK, AND IT IS ONLY 16,000,000 MILES AWAY AND IT IS TRAVELLING AT 13,490 MPH TOWARDS US.

PROFESSOR S.T. BUTLER OF SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY ON FEBRUARY 4, 1968, TRIED TO EXPLAIN THAT ICARUS, PLANETOID WEIGHING ABOUT AS MUCH AS MOUNT EVEREST, WAS TO PASS WITHIN 500,000 MILES OF THE EARTH. HOWEVER: IF SCIENTIFIC CALCULATIONS WERE OFF .000001, ICARUS, WHOSE ORBITAL ECCENTRICITY QUOTIENT OF .43 MAKES IT THE MOST UNPREDICTABLE OF ALL PLANETONDS, COULD COME CONSIDERABLY CLOSER! ICARUS, WHICH IS A SCALED DOWN PLANET, WILL MAKE IT THROUGH THE ATMOSPHERE AND, EVEN THOUGH IT WILL BE ABOUT 1/3 OF ITS FORMER SELF, IT WILL STILL BE A FORTHOBBLE PIECE OF ROCK IF IT HITS.

WHY ISN'T THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT ALARMED? IT IS. M.I.T. OUTLINED A PLAN BY WHICH ICARUS WOULD BE BLOWN UP IN SPACE BY SEVEN SATURN ROCKETS EACH CARRYING AN ATOMIC PAYLOAD OF 40 MEGATONS. NOW, WHEN THESE ROCKETS HIT ICARUS OUT IN SPACE THERE WILL BE A BANG WORTH 280 MILLION TONS OF TNT AND SUPPOSEDLY ICARUS WILL BECOME ATOMIC WASTE AND NOT HURT ANYBODY. BUT THE FACT IS ALMOST 2000 DEATHS CAN BE ATTRIBUTED TO ICARUS ALREADY IN THE GUISE OF EARTHQUAKES IN INDIA AND CHINA, BREAK SNOW STORMS IN ARIZONA AND TIDAL WAVES IN THE ALBERTANS: THESE THINGS BEING INFLUENCED BY THE GRAVITATIONAL PULL OF ICARUS!

ANOTHER DANGER WE ENHANCE WITH ICARUS' APPROACH IS THAT OF DROWNING. IF THIS MOUNTAIN PASSES THE EARTH FROM THE EAST TO WEST AT ABOUT 420 MILES UP IT WILL PASS OVER THE ATLANTIC OCEAN, WHICH IS LESS DENSE THAN ICARUS. THE OCEAN WILL REACH 100 FT FOR ICARUS, AND WHEN THE PLANETOID HAS PASSED, LEAVING BEHIND HIS STUNNING CLOUD, WHO WILL THROW HERSELF BACK TO THE GROUND, THIS WATER WILL FALL FROM 327 FT UP, AND WILL SPEED ACROSS THE OCEAN TRYING TO KEEP UP WITH ICARUS WHO WILL HAVE SLOWED DOWN LITTLE FROM HIS ORIGINAL 13,490 MPH.

ON THE OTHER HAND IF THERE WERE EARTHQUAKES AND TIDAL WAVES AND FEROCENT BREAK STORMS, OR...

ALL OF THESE DANGERS INCREASE IN DIRECT PROPORTION TO THE CLOSING IN OF ICARUS BECAUSE ICARUS' PULL ON THE EARTH INCREASES WITH THE NEARNESS OF ICARUS AND ICARUS GOT 53.40 MILES CLOSER TO YOU WHILE YOU READ THIS.

Willem, a 28 year old Dutch cartoonist, is currently in a bit of a bind with a 2 month jail sentence in Amsterdam for publishing two "offensive" cartoons. Those are recreational ones. Cartoon A shows Queen Beatrix looking at a globe at 11:11 AM and she notices the Queen's head is visible but she is wrong. Queen Beatrix already counts 1765,000 worth of Sacrosanct DFL, 1115,000 of Royal Dutch Petroleum, 111,175,000 of KLM, 11,440,000 of Dutch Express and 10,000,000 of dutch-made coppered. Cartoon B is being prosecuted for insulting the pope.

Willem has previously published his satirical cartoons in a Dutch magazine, but he has had to enter a cartoon magazine called Grof Noordland and Olympe.
